Difficulties and problems in learning English

Different students may have different difficulties and problems in learning English. They may have different attitudes to English pronunciation, grammar, vocabulary and reading and writing.

There is a correlation between the native language of a learner and particular difficulties in learning and using English and the role of mother's language especially when in English pronunciation, grammar and vocabulary in their's native language interference in learning and using English.

Learning comprehension and speaking in English are the skills generally more important and thus reading and writing is left being in the English speaking country. Learning comprehension and speaking in English are more difficult and more important for learners to know that reading and writing. When reading and writing is not a learner has more time for thinking and process than when learning and speaking in English in a lab class.

It is better for the first six months students in English to concentrate on the oral English rather than their reading and writing. Oral in English which is especially when learning and speaking in English. Therefore learning comprehension and speaking in English are more difficult than reading and writing.

English vocabulary for each thing register more than and it is more difficult to learn to bridge between the English processes. One of the reasons for this is that students' difficulties in learning English vocabulary.
